Satellite radio, like cable tv, is a subscription service. The content, local and otherwise, which I and others pay for is determined by the market described by the subscriber population. As such, it seems that content should be determined by the parties who pay for private radio broadcasts and not by the broadcast stations that wish to restrict competition. Change is inevitable and the market place in a free market economy should decide what forms of entertainment, news, ets. are acceptable and survive.

Sincerely, Dr. Robert Schwander
